

CORGI (CARDIGAN TYPE)

SOUTHMORE TINY.

The Property of—

Mrs. PARTRIDGE,
Lower Haselor, near Evesham.

1st at Lampeter, 1926.

The Cardigan Welsh Corgi Club is making a great effort to revive this almost extinct breed, used on the mountains for bringing in the ponies; they are also delightful pets, and full of intelligence and pluck. The above bitch is very typical of her breed, and a rich black and tan with a great turn of speed for her size.

DESCRIPTION OF THE WELSH CORGI.

THERE are two varieties of Corgi at present, the better known being common to Pembrokeshire, while the other comes from Cardiganshire. The Pembrokeshire is a small dog, the weight of which should be from 18lb. to 30lb., and height at shoulder not exceeding 14in. The coat, of medium length and thick, is red or red and white in colour. Generally speaking, it may be said to be a dog of distinctly foxy appearance, standing on short, straight legs, with feet like a collie. The head should be shaped like that of the fox, being wide between the ears, and tapering towards a jaw of medium length, which is rather inclined to be snipy. The ears are erect, set wide apart, and are carried at an outward inclination. Eyes are well set, round, and of medium size; in colour, yellowish or light brown. Neck fairly long and strong. Chest, broad and deep, and well let down between the forelegs. Body of medium length. Ribs well sprung. Hindquarters, strong and flexible. Tail short. In the Cardigan Corgi any colour is permissible except pure white. Ears may be erect or semi-erect. The tail is long. Height, not over 15in., and weight from 18lb. to 25lb. The Standard says that the body should measure about one yard from the point of the nose to the tip of the tail, the prick ears are sharp, eyes giving that alert expression of the Fox.
